National Integration is the bond and togetherness between people irrespective of the caste, creed, religion or gender. It is the feeling of oneness, brotherhood and sociality within communities and society in a country. National Integration helps to keep the country united and strong from within despite the diversities. The importance of national integration can be understood from the fact that the nation which remains integrated will always progress on the track of development and prosperity.

The significance of national integration in a country like India increases manifold seeing the diversities and cultural differences. It plays a very crucial role in the modern times especially in a country like India which is still on a developing track. National integration makes a country resilient by uniting its citizen with a single thread of brotherhood and

The children stay about 6-8 hours in a school. They are busy in their intellectual work throughout the day along with sometime which is spared for co-curricular programmes. Having spent 3-4 hours in their studies, they require something to eat. Generally the children, during their recess hours eat some eatables which are not adequate for their health. Even petty sellers do not keep in mind the hygienic standards essential to maintain the food-ingredients nutritional value. All these things invite contagious diseases and unhealthy modes of eating.

The Government of India had started the mid-day meal programme in all the schools in India in 1961. The well – equipped schools are advised to run a good canteen for the students. UNESCO has also made plenty of efforts to distribute food-material in canned boxes in the developing countries of the world.

Mid-Day Meal (MDM) is a wholesome^{1 of 4} freshly-cooked lunch served to children in government and government-aided schools in India. On 28 November 2001, the Supreme national integration.

We have seen many incidents of riots and revolts in the country in past years and these incidents are a threat to the social and cultural integrity of a nation. These issues also pose a big hurdle on the path of country's development. National integration is the only thing which could stabilize the development of a country, improve the economic growth and add value to its cultural and social status.

The growth and development of a country directly depends on its integrity and unity and if it lacks in both then it becomes impossible for the nation to progress ahead towards a sustained development. National integration acts as a basic foundation for maintaining harmony, peace and brotherhood in the society thus building a country which is strong, united and resilient.
